History of Arianism

First among the doctrinal disputes which troubled Christians after Constantine had recognized the Church in A.D.

313, and the parent of many more during some three centuries, Arianism occupies a large place in ecclesiastical history

. It is not a modern form of unbelief, and therefore will appear strange in modern eyes. But we shall better grasp its meaning if we term it an Eastern attempt to rationalize the creed by stripping it of mystery so far as the relation of Christ to God was concerned. In the New Testament and in Church teaching Jesus of Nazareth appears as the Son of God . This name He took to Himself ( Matthew 11:27 John 10:36 ). while the Fourth Gospel declares Him to be the Word (Logos), Who in the beginning was with God and was God , by Whom all things were made. A similar doctrine is laid down by St. Paul , in his undoubtedly genuine Epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, and Philippians. It is reiterated in the Letters of Ignatius , and accounts for Pliny's observation that Christians in their assemblies chanted a hymn to Christ as God . But the guestion how the Son was related to the Father (Himself acknowledged on all hands to be the one Supreme Deity ), gave rise, between the years A.D. 60 and 200, to a number of Theosophic systems, called generally Gnosticism , and having for their authors Basilides , Valentinus, Tatian , and other Greek speculators. Though all of these visited Rome , they had no following in the West, which remained free from controversies of an abstract nature, and was faithful to the creed of its baptism . Intellectual centres were chiefly Alexandria and Antioch, Egyptian or Syrian, and speculation was carried on in Greek. The Roman Church held steadfastly by tradition. Under these circumstances, when Gnostic schools had passed away with their "conjugations" of Divine powers, and "emanations" from the Supreme unknowable God (the "Deep" and the "Silence") all speculation was thrown into the form of an inquiry touching the "likeness" of the Son to His Father and "sameness" of His Essence. Catholics had always maintained that Christ was truly the Son, and truly God . They worshipped Him with divine honours; they would never consent to separate Him, in idea or reality, from the Father, Whose Word, Reason, Mind, He was, and in Whose Heart He abode from eternity . But the technical terms of doctrine were not fully defined; and even in Greek words like essence ( ousia ), substance ( hypostasis physis ),

), nature (

person

(

hyposopon

) bore a variety of meanings drawn from the pre-Christian

sects

of

philosophers

, which could not but entail misunderstandings until they were cleared up. The adaptation of a vocabulary employed by

Plato

and

Aristotle

to

Christian

truth

was a matter of time; it could not be done in a day; and when accomplished for the Greek it had to be undertaken for the Latin, which did not lend itself readily to

necessary

yet subtle distinctions. That disputes should spring up even among the orthodox

who all held one

faith

, was inevitable. And of these wranglings the rationalist

would take advantage in order to substitute for the ancient creed his own inventions. The drift of all he advanced was this: to deny that in any

true

sense

God

could have a Son; as

Mohammed

tersely said afterwards, "

God

neither begets, nor is He begotten" (

Koran

, 112). We have learned to call that denial

Unitarianism

. It was the ultimate scope of Arian opposition to what

Christians

had always believed. But the Arian, though he did not come straight down from the Gnostic

, pursued a line of argument and taught a view which the speculations of the Gnostic had made familiar. He described the Son as a second, or inferior God

, standing midway between the First Cause and creatures; as Himself made out of nothing, yet as making all things else; as existing before the worlds of the ages; and as arrayed in all divine perfections except the one which was their stay and foundation.

God

alone was without beginning, unoriginate; the Son was originated, and once had not existed. For all that has origin must begin to be.

God protects His own. I Jesus has assured the indestructibility of His Church. By examining the succession of authority from St. Peter we can find out who is the legal inheritor of the mantle of St. Peter. For 2000 years Rome had the same church, but Europe broke away, and created their own denominations, and to substitute the Apostolic authority they introduced the Bible as the sole authority, and the interpretation was left to the individuals, and one can judge from the evolution of these events, by looking at the present day state of affairs. Of course, Jesus is still the Lord, and dispenser of mercies, and we can rely on Him, that he will protect those who genuinely love him and want to serve him, even though they may by ignorance have broken away from the authority which he promised to protect.
