

In His relation to men Jesus manifested certain qualities which were perceived by all, being subject to the light of reason; but other qualities were reserved for those who viewed Him in the light of faith. Both deserve a brief study.

From that day till today his influence is felt, and Catholics have held faith in him all these 2000 years. After the Protestant Reformation, there was a change and the difference of opinions made men look at one another with suspicion and to downplay the former Catholics spread canards like they brought renaissance in the thinking process and discarded all the past as coming from the "Dark Ages" which we took for granted, as we studied under the British who were Protestant.

When I saw Wikipedia it did not mention the thinking that took place from the time of Christ to the renaissance. As if, knowledge was brought by the Modern Philosophers !

This is the very reason, for not looking at the Truth impartially.

Today's state of affairs is there for everyone to see. Who are the ones who reap the benefit and who are suffering ? Does any one ask why ?

There is no point in convincing others. If they really want to know, they must put in their effort to find out and in this, it is God who helps those who want to help themselves. He is the one who enlightens the minds of the willing. Those who are having motives, he will let them remain blind and reap the fruit of their own actions.
